

finding a financial planner

WHEN SHE APPROACHED A MILESTONE birthday, Nina Lewis, of Columbus, Ohio, realized she needed help getting her financial life in order. "I was going into my 40s with no savings and only a small IRA, and I was scared," says Lewis, a housing coordinator for the city of Columbus. A colleague steered her to financial counselor Edie Milligan, and during several meetings they analyzed the concerns Lewis and her companion had, and drew up a three-page solution: a budget, a saving strategy, and a long-term investment plan. "Edie really helped take away a lot of the stress," Lewis says.

No wonder. People don't take out their own appendixes or replace their cars' crankshaft. So why should they take on something as complex as financial planning alone? More and more these days, they're not. Financial planners are in high demand, particularly for people in midlife who suddenly find themselves being hit from all sides: aging parents to assist, retirement to save for, college tuition to pay. And with portfolios hammered by two years of a bear market, professional guidance looks less like a luxury and more like a necessity.

Because financial issues are emotionally charged, finding an appropriate planner is in many ways like finding the right therapist: A good relationship is key. "Your planner will know more about you than your doctor does," says Dee Lee, a Certified Financial Planner (CFP) and the author of Let's Talk Money (Chandler House Press; 2001). Among the secrets you will need to divulge: information about your family's health and its demands on you, now and in the future; your lifestyle, income, and professional prospects; your assets; the stability of your marriage; and your dreams and goals. Says Milligan, a Certified Financial Planner, Chartered Life Underwriter, and Accredited Financial Counselor; and the author of Take Charge! A Woman's Guide to a Secure Retirement (Alpha; 2002), "I ask my clients, 'What keeps you up at night?'"

Conventional wisdom holds that the best planners are the "fee-only" type. It's a reasonable presumption.

A planner who earns commissions buying stocks or mutual funds for a client may have a conflict of interest. Instead of putting your needs first, he has an incentive to steer you toward the investment that will pay him the most. Yet, with hourly rates ranging from $75 to $400, fee-only planners aren't within everyone's reach. Some won't even take clients with less than $500,000 to invest. And while the impact of commissions should concern you, four out of five planners take them. If they were all untrustworthy, they'd soon go out of business.

That thorny issue is only one of the reasons why choosing the right planner can be challenging. What's more, advisers come from backgrounds in accounting, insurance,

SEE THE GUIDE FOR SOURCES

If a planner is fee-only, inquire about the rates and what they like the answer. You want the widest range of products at your disposal. If a planner is fee-only, inquire about the fees and what they include. If the firm charges an annual retainer to manage money (usually 1 percent of the assets), what will that cover besides an initial consultation and plan? Quarterly check-ins? Regular reassess reallocation? How often will your plan be updated to stay in sync with your life? Can the firm help you buy securities, funds, or insurance policies?

Financial plans cost between $400 and $3,000, depending on the complexity of a client's needs. If that's too high or you have less than $100,000 to invest, a hybrid-type planner who charges fees and accepts commissions may be a good, cost-saving compromise. Ask if she will subcontract from your bill any commissions she earns. Always get a written statement of services to provide the details of the planner's compensation— and what you or the plan-sponsor will be responsible for.

Perhaps most important is your emotional evaluation. "See how you feel in their presence," says Denise Gustin-Piazza, a CFP, Certified Fund Specialist, and Certified Retirement Counselor in Chicago; a member of the Financial Planning Association; and a co-author of Winning Financial Strategies for Women (John Wiley & Sons, 2001). A good financial adviser, she says, is part teacher and part listener. He should inspire confidence, offer He should inspire confidence, offer as much, or as little, handholde-make you feel comfortable, and make you feel comfortable, and choose a therapist, but your relationship could have nearly as great an impact on your well-being. ■

Find out how the planner is paid. If it is by commission, ask why representing a financial-services company is common, held by nearly forty thousand advisers, is the CFP, or allégiance to a code of ethics. The course work, exams, and a pledge of several designations that require Most planners hold at least one of

LOOK BEYOND CREDENTIALS

and your state's securities regulator) with the accrediting organization. Violations or improprieties? Check periodically? Has he been cited for Who covers it? Can you call clients with minimum portfolios? Does the planner only take on employees in all those specialties. May want a multiservice office with a total financial overhaul, you for a total financial overhaul, you but may not be experts in insurance stocks. CPAs can handle tax matters be licensed to buy and sell funds and lawyer can draw up wills while a broker registered representative will what services they provide. Only a they have been in the business, and out about their education, how long interviewed several planners. Find out if you want a combination of plan, but then you would like to step one to draw up a comprehensive plan, but then you need reg-ular tax-planning tune-ups.

Investment house, but you need reg-ular tax-planning tune-ups.

Particular bank, trust company, or satisfied having your nest egg with a as project manager. You may be in a plan, but then you would like to step one to draw up a comprehensive plan, but then you need reg-ular tax-planning tune-ups.

Picking savvy. Maybe you want some planning only for her fund—or stock-planter or funds. Conversely, you may need a lawyer, or stockbroker. Planners asset allocation, but once that's done, perhaps you need expert advice on a divorce or the death of a spouse? Facing a major life change, such as froming a job loss or pay cut, or budgeting or debt problems, confidential savvy and the state of your financial health. Are you having serious issues? Or do you want an adviser who will draw up a specific house-hold budget, give investment advice, hold bonds? Or do you want an adviser who will help you think through one who will help you think through you want from a planner. Is it some-thing a National Association of Personal Financial Advisors. Its 750-plus members work on a flat-fee basis. There are also Accredited Financial planners by assisting friends, relatives, and work style are as important as creditentials. Start shopping for a and especially her personality. A planner's approach, philosophy, and especially credit-card debt.

Significant credit-card debt. caution, often sought by people with apy-like money-management educators, who specialize in their consultation and savings. Start shopping for a and especially credit-card debt. signficant credit-card debt.

Financial planners come from exclusive creditorial comes from Personal Financial Specialist. A more traditional training to become a CPA. Accountants have undergone addition— and confusing—credentials. Securities brokering, or the law and can hold any one of a dozen differ-

The first step is to figure out what you want from a planner. Is it something a National Association of Personal Financial Advisors. Its 750-plus members work on a flat-fee basis.

IDENTIFY YOUR SITUATION

than three thousand Certified Public Certified Financial Planner. More than four thousand Financial Planners— and

DETERMINE THE COST

and your state's securities regulator)

with the accrediting organization.

Violations or improprieties? Check periodically? Has he been cited for Who covers it? Can you call clients with minimum portfolios?

Does the planner only take on employees in all those specialties.

May want a multiservice office with a total financial overhaul, you

but then you need reg-ular tax-planning tune-ups.

Investment house, but you need reg-ular tax-planning tune-ups.

Particular bank, trust company, or satisfied having your nest egg with a as project manager. You may be in a plan, but then you would like to step one to draw up a comprehensive plan,

but then you need reg-ular tax-planning tune-ups.

Picking savvy. Maybe you want some planning only for her fund—or stock-planter or funds. Conversely, you may need a lawyer, or stockbroker. Planners asset allocation, but once that's done, perhaps you need expert advice on a divorce or the death of a spouse?

Facing a major life change, such as froming a job loss or pay cut, or budgeting or debt problems, confidencial savvy and the state of your financial health. Are you having serious issues? Or do you want an adviser who will draw up a specific household budget, give investment advice, hold bonds? Or do you want an adviser who will help you think through one who will help you think through you want from a planner. Is it something a National Association of Personal Financial Advisors. Its 750-plus members work on a flat-fee basis.